

Introducing Jackie Zammit Primary Geography

Jackie is a freelance educator, based in Birmingham, working in the fields of Geography, Global Learning and Peace Education. Jackie studied Geography at the University of Derby and is particularly passionate about fieldwork and development issues. She has been a tutor for the Field Studies Council, teaching Geography and Environmental Science, and currently supports a residential centre in Dorset with their outdoor learning offer with her colleagues at Lifeworlds Learning. This includes teaching on their residential courses. Jackie is a consultant for the Geographical Association and facilitates primary Geography CPD for networks, academy trusts and schools across the West Midlands and in London on behalf of the GA and independently. Her CPD is focused on the teaching of core geography, progression, fieldwork and mapping as well as the teaching of local and distant places.

As an Associate Practitioner with Lifeworlds, Jackie is co-producing educational resources for PositiveNegatives who create compelling animations, comics and podcasts about pressing social, humanitarian and environmental issues, all based on research.

Jackie is also a peace educator with Peacemakers and works with both children and adults to build more peaceful school environments. Jackie loves to develop and facilitate workshops for children and is often invited to run sessions in primary schools on refugee issues, climate justice and other global issues.
